Weigley Room (914)

The documentary "Breath of Freedom" tells the story of African-American GIs who were stationed in Germany at the end of World War II as part of a policy to help rid the country of racism and oppression, based on the book A Breath of Freedom: The Civil Rights Struggle, African American GIs, and Germany. Accepted by the German people as representatives of a victorious power, these African-American GIs found themselves in a foreign country experiencing for the first time what it feels like to be treated as equals. Co-Author Maria Hoehn (Vassar College) will be present for a screening and discussion of the movie.
