The political climate of the Middle East in recent years has been tumultuous: Death sentences for members of the Muslim Brotherhood were handed down by Egypt's criminal court. More than 100,000 Syrians have died as a result of the carnage of Syria's civil war. Yet, millions of Iraqis embraced the right to vote in recent elections, and in other countries, new governments and constitutions are in place.

Dr. Paul Salem, Vice President for Policy and Research at the Middle East Institute in Washington, D.C., will join us to discuss the historic changes taking place in the Middle East and will offer his insights on the rapidly-changing political, social and economic conditions in Egypt, Syria, and their neighbors.
